ANTIAGING

WHAT IT IS

Antiaging skin care can be described as a way to treat skin in order to prevent or manage the appearance of wrinkles, fine lines, and sun damage. Antiaging skin care comes in many forms and is used to lessen the look of fading youthfulness.

WHY YOU NEED IT

There are many ways to treat aging skin, but one of the simplest ways to effectively turn back the clock is through sun protection. A broad-spectrum, high SPF sunscreen can prevent early, onset signs of aging, such as hyperpigmentation. Exercise, diet, and lifestyle can also help keep skin looking young. Many antiaging skin care products feature ingredients such as retinol, vitamin C, peptides, green tea, grape seed extract, and niacinamides – which are known to reduce the look of aging dramatically. Treatments like LED, fillers and botox, laser, and facials can stimulate new collagen within skin cells to produce firmer and younger skin.

Other options for treating aging include skin tightening treatments, hydrating facials, dermaplaning, and ultrashaping. These options and more can reveal new skin, while also allowing the skin barrier to retain its youthful glow.

WHAT IT TREATS

Aging occurs no matter how many products or treatments a person may use. How quickly a person ages can be influenced by genetic factors and also by their habits. Tanning beds, smoking, and consuming alcohol can not only cause premature aging, but can also affect how antiaging treatments will work on the skin. Lifestyle can be a main culprit of early signs of aging. Fine lines and wrinkles are inevitable, but by taking care of one's skin the aging process can begin to slow down.

Antiaging treatments, methods, and protocols can be used to inevitably erase years of damage to the skin. Fine lines, wrinkles, sun spots, and so forth can disappear, fade, or go away altogether if a strict antiaging regimen is kept up.
